Health Board Ohioville Group Launched Of TB Clinic

LISBON - Operation of the TB Columbiana County Board of Health, was discussed when the board met Monday night in its of-

County commissioners took the clinic from the jurisdiction of the Board of Trustees last month, dismissed three nurses and an X-ray technician and gave control of the clinic to the health board. Only the director, Dr. F. G. Kravec of Youngstown, was retained.

One nurse was hired and another person to serve as clerk and X-ray technician.

The board discussed the number of patients in the county receiving medical supplies and treatment, showing 48 in the county health district, eight at East Palestine, 13 at Wellsville, 48 at East Liverpool and 18 at Salem

For the present, East Liverpool and Salem health nurses will handle their own patients and the lone county TB nurse will take care of the county patients and those of Wellsville and East Palestine.

A report was given on the time it takes to put one person through X-ray and make out reports, consultation and other details, which was estimated at one hour.

The board requested Dr. C. S. Palmer, county health commissioner, to obtain all the necessary information as to the budget. number of patients in hospitals and other data in time for the next meeting so the board can be brought up to date on the opera-

The 1962 budget for the health department was discussed for almost two hours. The board decided to check further on several estimated fund sources, but the low-

Congress Will Set Awhile

Everybody in Washington seems to be feeling agreeable about everybody else, now that everybody knows who everybody else is.

But one circumstance that wasn't visible earlier in this first month of a new federal administration is getting to be big as life as the days wear on. The journey to the New Frontier, which is President Kennedy's catchphrase for his program, is slow to get under

One estimate puts the number of ideas for the journey so far at 100, which isn't far off the mark. In some quarters, such as organized labor, there has been an inclination to line the streets to watch the New Frontier wagon train get under way on its long passage westward. But in other quarters, such as Congress, there has been no inclination to do anything but listen with close attention to all the ideas for reaching the New

SOME DAY in the near future the journey to the New Frontier will get under way-no doubt about it. But there is no hurry about it, as far as the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate are concerned.

The American people and President Kennedy's administration are seeing a demonstration of the balance of power and divided responsibility in the federal government.

No one of the three coordinate branches of the government can create an atmosphere of urgency by itself. Two can create the atmosphere, as occurred in the early days of Franklin Roosevelt's administration, when the executive department wrote laws and sent them to Congress for rubber - stamp ap-

But even then the balance of power continued to operate. The judicial branch failed to recognize the urgency claimed for some

There is certain to be, speculation about the effect of this singular absence of urgency about starting for the New Frontier. Will it hurt or help President Kennedy? Will it hurt or help the country? Will it put Congress and the Kennedy administration at odds? What will be its net effect?

Only the last question is answerable now. Its net effect will be to make certain that the recession, with its heavy unemployment, is not deepened by government intervention in private economics until the advent of spring in the wealth-producing areas of the country has given private industry a chance to rally after the severest winter in weather

Conspiracy In Constraint Of Trade

It is strange, when you stop to think about it, that not a government lawyer has lifted a finger and not a single labor-union crier in the wilderness has howled against a wildcat strike of flight engineers that has tied up the business of six major airlines and threatened the livelihood of thousands of airline employes

This is a conspiracy in restraint of trade. The damage done is irreparable. There can be no actions at law afterward to recover the losses caused by the whimsical action of a handful of people who took it into their heads to act contrary to the public interest and contrary to their own contractual agree-

These are the same members of the aviation industry who were arguing with airlines in the late weeks of 1958 over the issue of whether or not they were entitled to ride in the cockpits of advanced types of aircraft without being, in fact, pilots,

This time their claim is that they must continue to bargain in their own behalf, instead of pooling their interests with the Air Line Pilots Association, as proposed by the National Labor Relations Board. But what they strike about is of no interest to the general public

The effect of their striking is of great interest, however, because they have demonstrated how a minority of employes in the growing aviation industry can manhandle it and its customers. The effect of their strike would do credit to the most ambitious dreams of all the people who have tried to get their hands on the throat of U.S. transportation, including the redoubtable James R. Hoffa.

executives serving jail sentences because the federal government said they were running a cartel have a sense of humor when they read what can be done in restraint of trade if you're working the other side of the street.

Watch Your Step!

It noted that 530 persons died in that state in 1960 as the result of home accidents. whereas only 60 were killed in industrial mis-

Did some one mutter, but that's Wisconsin, it can't happen here in East Liverpool.

Think not? Take a look at these emergencies reported in Monday's Review: A boy suffered an injured right shoulder when he fell down the cellar steps; a man's foot was punctured by a nail; a boy cut his head in a fall: a girl's hand was cut when she pushed against a pane of glass.

Fortunately, there were no fatalities here. Regardless, there is a moral to the story. It's: Safety begins at home.

Now would be a good time for another checkup on things that need attention around your house. You or your children don't want to become members of the "Emergency

That would pit the United States against the Soviet Union. It would be a repetition of Korea, although Adlai E. Stevenson, U.S. delegate to the United Nations, pointed out carefully last week that the United States would not act again without cooperation if military violence broke out in the Congo.

But there is no assurance there would be cooperation. Why would European nations go to war against Negroes in Africa? Why would anyone go to war against Negroes in the Congo? Why would the United Nations want civil war without becoming embroiled in

One must wonder in this sixth decade of the 20th century how things would have been 100 years ago in the United States if there had been a United Nations. How would things have been 200 years ago, when the then great powers of the world-Britain and Francewere taking sides over the surging nationalism of the American colonies.

It is the conventional wisdom of this era that military violence is unthinkable; everybody agrees that this is so. But everybody feels this way only about the other fellow's

Thus, civil war is a relative crime against society, instead of an absolute crime. If it happens in Cuba, it's good, though Cubans die and suffer as much as anyone else.

In the Congo, civil war would be bad. But whether the United Nations or the United States could prevent it is an open question. If enough Congolese strong men feel like fighting to the last drop of Congolese blood, there's nothing that can stop them.

Writers And Politicians

By Raymond Moley

I was asked recently by a friendly editor to ask the new President to give me the run of the place for a few days and then to write my impressions of the similarities and contrasts between the scene in Washington after the advent of FDR in 1933 and no

He suggested that there is now the same exciting action, the same niscences. invasion of professors and writers, the same proliferation of ideas of reform and rebuilding.

As an article of ephemeral interest, the result might have had attention. But I declined. Why? Because I am vastly more interested in what is ahead rather than in what is now history. One can hope measurably to influence what is to be but the past is a closed account. With its triumphs and tragedies, it must remain as the material for historians to do with as their various points of view may dictate. Let them echo "far off things and battles long ago." A journalist should stick to

My friend's suggestion however did stimulate a few reflections on the current hearty welcome to scholars, professors and artists of various sorts to participate in the practical business of governing a nation. These reflections I offer for what they may be worth.

AS I HAVE SEEN the world of politics over a considerable number of years, those who give their attention to it may be divided into two groups - especially those who were significant figures either in the realm of action or the realm of written comment.

These are those who, in the midst of the rough business of practical politics, either as candidates or public officials, invariably turn their eyes with little envy upon those whose business is to write about public affairs. And then there are those who, in the cloistered security of the college campus or their studies or even editorial life, cast possessive glances at the seats of the official bureaucracy Both long for what is not

With the former group there have been Theodore Roosevelt, Coolidge, Alfred E. Smith, and Fiorello LaGuardia, who became columnists after their retirement. Herbert Hoover has written ex-ly about a recession or a readjustment, but there's a good deal of harm in exaggerations by politicians. They s o m e times seek only to blame the opposite party or else to develop an atmosphere that will push a panicky Congress into big spending programs. What would David Lawrence really be most helpful and constructive would be a discussion that puts the whole economic situation in perspective.

If, for instance, unemployment is to be reduced and held to a 4 per cent level, which is considered normal, it will be necessary to have a net growth of about 1, 525,000 new jobs every year from now through 1965. This is based on official forecasts by the Department of Labor on the coming of age of new workers and the number retired each year.

In addition to this, even more jobs — possibly another 2,725,000 per year-will have to be created to take care of the persons who will be displaced by automation and increased productivity per man-hour or greater efficiency.

It is easy enough to bandy about figures on what the percentage of growth in national output should be. This is sometimes facetiously referred to as growthmanship. But the problem of a needed growth to take care of an expanded population and an increase in consumer requirements is not going to be solved by a mere mathematical formula

It can be solved in only one of two ways - by a regulated economy that eventually can only mean state socialism and bring on an imitation communism or by an intensified system of private enter-

Unfortunately, politics has produced a bad atmosphere for the private - enterprise system. The politician may not admit it but almost every solution he comes up with implies more and more government controls or more and more government spending.

WHAT IS DESIRABLE is a new emphasis on job creation. The profit system needs to be energized. While laws are necessary to curb improper use of economic power both management and labor, tribute largely to confusion and totalitarian, economy

There's no harm in talking open- actually retard national growth. Clarification of old laws, rather than enactment of new laws, is really needed.

Much, for instance, is made of the way antitrust laws are violated but it takes any army of lawvers to advise what is or is not lawful. Many mistakes are made and many law violations are not detected. One businessman said privately the other day that, if all the antitrust laws were strictly complied with today, many companies would have to suspend operations to find out what to do and that, since many would be in doubt, business would be injured to an incalculable extent. Expansion would be discouraged and monopoly increased.

The same thing is true with respect to the impact of the tax laws. They often discourage job creation. The problem of depreciation allowances on taxes is still unsolved because it is handled by politicians instead of economists.

AMERICA has been passing through a recession that shows some signs now of having reached bottom. Part of its damage was undoubtedly due to the unusually harsh winter weather, which has adversely affected some industries as well as retail sales and trans-

Some significant indicators now are on the optimistic side but this should not encourage indifference to the solution of the problem of frequent recessions and readjustments in the national economy.

It will do little good merely to cry out for "more national growth." What is needed is a restudy of job creation

While the profit motive does provide an incentive to businessmen and investors, it is by no means the only motive for successful operation of modern business. There is a deep-seated desire to succeed in a given enterprise and to ex-

Days Of Real Mud

There was no civilization as we know it now until something was done about spring mud.

Even in towns and cities, civilization used to disappear every spring when the frost left the ground. And what happened in RFD was beyond belief for people who never saw it.

It still happens off the beaten path in the country, and for a sample a city dweller can look at conditions on his own unimproved streets and alleys when the thaw

Each year conditions finally grow so desperate that panicky residents finally fire off indignant letters to the editor demanding relief. And beleaguered officials responsible for street and highway maintenance tear out what is left of their hair, because there is nothing they can do.

In RFD it ultimately gets so soft before it firms up that no one goes away from a standing truck or tractor for fear it will just dirty. sink out of sight in the soup.

Outbuildings not tethered to oaks and other deeply rooted trees have been known to change locations overnight, especially during rains. Cases have been reported of wells shifting location, also of wells that oozed out of perpendicular due to shifts in the soil. Not uncommonly flagpoles tip over and in extreme conditions have been known to sink straight down, like straws slipping into malted milk. Stone walls have sunk into oblivion during the spring mud season. Houses and barns that have stood for decades have started to go down by the stern and have had to be pumped full of hot air to make them buoyant

Until hard-surfaced roads and sidewalks, this was a way of life for everybody. The first automobiles were made with high wheels so they could be driven rapidly over the primordial ooze of springtime without bogging down. #### Court Upholds Family Right To Sue Police

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court, interpreting a 90year-old statute enacted as a weapon against the Ku Klux Klan, held Monday a Chicago family can sue city police in federal court for entering their partment without a warrant and pushing them around.

The high court's unanimous ruling on the Civil Rights Act of 1871 overturned lower courts which had held that James Monroe and his family could only sue in state courts.

The city itself cannot be sued under the ruling. Eight of the justices agreed on that. Dissenting on this point, Justice Frankfurter said he felt the city as well as the police officers could be used under the federal statute.

Among other major actions of the day, the high court:

Upheld 6-1 a New York District Court order stripping U.S. citizenship from racketeer Frank Costello. The action opens the way for possible deportation proceedings against the elderly gambler who was brought to this country from Sicily as a child. Costello is now serving time in Atlanta on conviction of income tax evasion.
